

Fake followers are still rife

By Anne Dolinschek

9 Oct 2018

Fake followers have been a contentious bone for years, but even though everyone warns against it, it's still rife.

© kls via 123RF.com

In fact, there's been a spike in buying Instagram followers of late. The platform is where it's at right now, with brands flocking to Instagram to pay influencers to promote their products.

Fake it 'til you make it

We have to admit that Zuckerberg messing with the algorithm meant that most of us are getting a lot fewer likes and engagement. If you're trying to build a brand, and not just show off your pets on the platform, this is bad news. Hence, many started buying likes and in turn followers.

Fake followers are a massive problem, as SA duo proves

Hadlee Simons 3 Apr 2017

The rationale is along the lines of "fake it 'till you make it" aka buying followers will lead to real ones being interested and following organically. I would caution strongly against this. Once a brand gets sniff in the nose of such trickery, your reputation as an influencer might fall to tatters.

The other reason is the fact that brands are ignorant. They are laser focused on how many followers their influencers have, that they've lost sight of the important bits like whether they speak to the correct audiences, do they have good engagement rates and most importantly – are all their followers real?

Fake reach and engagement

Websites selling likes and followers have also become smarter. No more do they sell completely fake followers, but rather promise "real" ones these days. Yes, these users now have real followers and likes, but it's still paid for, therefore the reach and engagement is fake.

What now? I'd suggest that you take some time to look through people's followers and likes. Are most of it from a foreign country, in other words, not from where they're based or related to the post?

Have they all of a sudden gained a lot of followers? Do they suddenly get significantly more likes than before? All of this always raise alarm bells for me. It just doesn't add up. Everyone is suffering under the algorithm curse, except for these people. insert side-eye. Buying followers is not exclusive to Instagram however, it's popular on Twitter and Snapchat too.

The rise of micro influencers

I'm hoping that the rise of micro-influencers was partly due to most huge followings proving not to be as influential as brands thought to be – real or not. It's been proven that accounts with smaller followings influence their audiences more as they are viewed to be peers rather than being aspirational. They have small but loyal followings, who trust in their opinions.

Will the real influencers please stand up?

Bradley Elliott 18 Dec 2017

If you're a big brand looking for big followings, I'd advise that you'd most probably get more bang for your buck investing your money into a couple of smaller accounts with the right audiences to garner better results.

ABOUT ANNE DOLINSCHKE

Owner and chief strategist at Nfluential. I'm a gladiator in a pencil skirt with a main focus on influencer marketing strategy. I empower brands to implement effective and measurable influencer campaigns.

- What do we mean by influencers in South African terms? - 1 Apr 2019
- Fake followers are still rife - 9 Oct 2018
- Snapchat vs Instagram stories - 13 Jan 2017
- Storytelling for brands - evolve or be left behind - 4 Nov 2016
- Brands and influencers - the struggle is real - 25 Jul 2016

View my profile and articles...

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>