Technology makes an impact

D&AD Impact is a global initiative and awards programme that exists to showcase how creative thinking can be a force for good, in the belief that purpose can enhance business success and value, alongside promoting collective responsibility for the global sustainability agenda.

South Africa's North VCA was shortlisted in the sustainability category for its work on Polyco's 'Packa-Ching' campaign – which encouraged recycling efforts in exchange for money.

This year, the use of design and emerging technologies featured prominently within the top winning work. Both Black Pencil winners had a focus on 3D printing – with Harmless Guns tackling the proliferation of illegal firearms and Ikea This Ables making Ikea furniture more accessible for people with disabilities.

The use of AI was also a common theme within the lineup of projects that took home the top awards – being used both to help increase accessibility for people with special-needs and tackle issues such as racism.

Four White Pencils, the premier accolade for creativity that has a positive social impact, were awarded.

Patrick Burgoyne, D&AD CEO, said: “Our winners, this year, showcase the power of creativity to make significant, positive impact in the world. From increasing accessibility to products and services, to changing policy and changing lives, this is work the whole industry can be proud of.”

The impact of the future

The D&AD Impact Council, an esteemed group of business and thought leaders from across the creative, brand, investment, social impact, sustainability and NGO space, assembled on 5 November to decide which work was deserving of a Wood, Graphite, White or Black Pencil.

Their support for the programme continues on as part of the D&AD Future Impact programme, a new initiative for 2019 that exists to support creative ideas that have the potential to change the world.

At least 11 winning prototypes, products and projects, including personalised colouring books for dementia patients (A Colourful Life) and speciality paper from locally-sourced discarded pineapple leaves (Pinyapel), form this year's cohort.

The Future Impacters will receive access to a fund worth $150,000 that includes consultancy and mentoring, visibility and grants, and a place on the D&AD Impact Accelerator. This is a two-day masterclass, held at McCann New York from 6 to 7 November 2019.

Spearheaded by members of the council, the accelerator has been designed to help the cohort amplify their ideas, so they can start generating impact after launch.
