

The age of exponential proportion of digital marketing - how to capitalise on CX and UX

 By Rirhandzu Shingwenyana

6 Apr 2020

Firstly let's decipher the following terms: CX = consumer experience and UX = user experience.

Image credit: Christina Mbrillo on Pexels.

These two terms may sound similar or rather often used interchangeable, however, in their rights they are not the same and neither should they be used interchangeably.

In marketing terms, a 'user' is a person who interacts with your campaign or promotion efforts. When someone visits your website that visit is called a 'user'.

Then, there is a consumer, this is a target market/target audience. In simple terms, it means when you develop a campaign and decide on a specific target audience/market this becomes your consumer of whatever services you are marketing or promoting.

In an event where a brand or marketer is aiming for an experiential outcome from the 'user', the plan and implementation should be different from that of the 'consumer'.

Let's put this into perspective. When you are implementing a campaign to leverage the CX there must be an understanding of the consumer dynamics such as the platforms that which they utilise to consumer your services. This will aid better the experience.

Customer experience in a time of uncertainty

Barbara Cador, Kantar 31 Mar 2020

As for the user experience campaign, here the aim is to be stressed on optimising the user-friendliness of the medium used to flight the campaign alleviate without compromising the prime experience. If the user experience is that optimal there is a chance that you'll be rewarded with a nice user-generated content (UGC), however, this, obviously depends on the type of your content.

Over and above, it is important to understand and know very well the objective(s) of your marketing campaign. Also, is pivotal that you set specific measurable achievable realistic timeously (Smart) objectives. Often marketing objectives are broad (not specific) and end up ruining the entire campaign because either is unrealistic, unachievable and doesn't have a timeline. End up running a cumbersome campaign and overall place.

The path to digital revolution for businesses in SA

Evan-Lee Courie 9 Mar 2020

By having the right dimensions at the perfect position it's highly possible to capitalise on CX and UX into your advantage and, knocking your objectives out of the park, splendidly.

After all, whether it is a user or consumer, the ultimate goal should always make them come back and to be your advocates, and you can only hit this by making their experience an unforgettable one. So don't mess it up, make it worthwhile.

ABOUT RIRHANDZU SHINGWENYANA

Rirhandzu Shingwenyana is a marketing, advertising and communications professional with experience in account management, social media and digital marketing campaign management.

- The rise of digital marketing: Assessing the impact of AI and machine learning on advertising practices - 5 Jun 2023
- Lets ramp up the value of digital marketing - 7 Mar 2023
- Bathu: more than just a shoe - 1 Nov 2022
- Communicating effectively through content marketing - 4 Oct 2022
- Marketing is the science of data and creativity - 13 Sep 2022

View my profile and articles...

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>