

How social media activity is fuelling future global women's sports investment

Increased social media activity is believed to be fuelling investment in future global women's sports.

Image credit: Jeffrey F Lin on Unsplash.

Last July's Women's World Cup soccer final, for example, was the most-watched soccer match ever in the US with nearly 25.4 million viewers.

Nielsen Sports unpacks biggest commercial sports trends for 2018

11 Jun 2018

Women's sport and social media

According to a 2018 Nielsen study, 84% of general sports fans have an interest in women's sports – 51% of those are male. This confirmed that women are interested in watching women's sports and that women's sports represent a major opportunity to engage male fans.

"I am Caster. Caster is me."

Amy Carmichael and Leigh Crymble 2 Aug 2019

However, although sports branding and social media activity are increasing in many aspects of women's sport, commercial disparity between male and female sports is still enormous.

Currently, only 0.4% of the total commercial investment in sport goes into women's sport and last year, female athletes got 4% of the worldwide sports media coverage, according to Unesco. As a direct consequence, women still receive only a tiny part of worldwide sponsorship deals.

Nike South Africa's "Just Do It: Caster Semenya" wins Gold at inaugural Gerety Awards

1 Aug 2019

So why aren't the multinational companies interested in investing in sportswomen?

According to Farhad Divecha, AccuraCast managing director, companies aren't as interested in investing in female competitors because they can't be 'guaranteed' the return of their investment back with greater media attention.

Adapt or die for the modern sports fan

Danette Breitenbach 26 Feb 2019

Women's sport at the forefront

However, comments Divecha, this may be changing, albeit slowly, due to the increase in social media activity around women's sport.

"There has recently been a positive change in the way women's sport is covered by the media but over time this change has happened very slowly. Hopefully, social media will help to speed up fan interest, increase engagement with the sportswomen themselves – which, in turn, should lead to more media interest and therefore, more commercial investment."

Divecha works with sports brands across multi-channels to drive event ticket sales, generate fan loyalty, boost event viewership and grow kit/merchandise sales.

New video encourages girls to keep playing sports

4 Aug 2016

"It has always been important for sports clubs and organisations to attract and keep fans interested in every aspect of their brand. Digital marketing – especially social media marketing – is now at the forefront and has been embraced by the biggest of sports played by men. It is now happening slowly and surely in women's sport, and we expect this to grow steadily from now on.

"Added to this, female competitors such as US football star Megan Rapinoe attract big followings on social media. This selfbranding increases visibility of individual female sports stars and will, in the long run, help to attract more interest from potential sponsors,” concludes Divecha.

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>